Course Information
Course Title	LAW AND ECONOMICS
Teaching Language	English
Teaching Methods	LECTURES AND SEMINARS
Type of Class Arrangement (A-H)	B
Course Description	This module is designed to show the intersection of law and economics. The course aims to develop an understanding of how economic concepts can be applied to legal rules. The module will explore the application of economic principles to legal doctrines and will focus on a number of areas. The module includes case studies which will be completed depending on the pace of the module. The course starts from the “birth” of law and economics as separate fields, examining the claims and the limits of the “pure economics” and “pure law” as well as the implicit assumptions which relate to them. This module aims to provide a detailed analysis of the interaction between law and economics in a number of specific areas. Familiarity with the economic effects of legal rules and accurate understanding of the institutional legal framework of market economies has become indispensable for understanding commercial reality. The learning outcomes of the course is the development of analytical skills

Course Books and Recommended Reading	The information made available to students throughout the course, whether practical or academic, is considerable. We purport to make full use of information technology and the Internet in this respect. We intend to make relevant information relating to each lecture: timetable, reading lists, and materials available on the course website in a timely manner. A seminal textbook in the areas of Law and Economics is Richard Posner “Economic Analysis of Law” , 2007, Wolters Kluwer. In each detailed week outline below, I have outlined the main topics and have provided the main (in addition to Posner’ s book) suggested readings (in bold). The additional reading materials listed below include both legal and economic sources. Focus on the ones you feel most comfortable with but you must attempt to familiarise yourselves with the literature in both disciplines. Additional materials may be circulated prior to each lecture. Useful websites include: http://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/JELJOUR-Results.
